Dear Mr Krivit

Thank you for contacting us about this article.

As you will appreciate, given the long history of science publishing (and ours in particular) there are inevitably a number of past papers in all journals that contain factual inaccuracies. Formal corrections to articles are normally authored by the author of the original work, but the author of this paper died in 2003 and the paper is now more than 50 years old. The process of science is of course a continuing process of self-correction and so I would encourage you to submit an e-letter pointing out the error in the original paper.

The process for submitting an e-letter is as follows: <https://royalsociety.org/about-us/terms-conditions-policies/publishing-terms-conditions/eletters-submission-guide/>

With best wishes

Yours sincerely

Dr Stuart Taylor
